Discussion Questions

- What are the classical sources one might turn to in building a framework of Jewish ethics? What books would be included in such a list of sources?
- How are the insights of the ancient Rabbis who wrote the books of the Talmud still relevant to modern society?
- In what ways can Jewish values be helpful to both Jews and non-Jews?
- Is reading and studying about values enough to influence a person's actions? If not, what more is needed?
- What are some of the values mentioned in this book that would help make the world a better place to live in?
- Are there any values you read about that you do not agree with, or that you could not accept? Explain.
- How would you summarize the thrust of this book?
- Do you think the Talmud emphasizes values for the individual or the community? Which do you think is more important?
- What are two or three of the values discussed in the book that helped you the most?
